IBBY RUSSIA NOMINATES

ANDREY USACHEV

FOR THE HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN AWARD 2018
Andrey Usachev
Children’s writer, poet, playwright and screenwriter

- He was born in Moscow on 5th July 1958.
- Initially he studied at the Moscow Institute of Electronics but after four years he switched to the Philological Faculty of Tver State University. (He wrote his thesis on ‘The Poetics of Daniel Harm’s Poems for Children’.)
- He served in the Soviet army for two years, worked as a caretaker, a guard, a drummer in a restaurant, a stage-hand at the Theatre of Satire and a railway guard; he cleaned beaches, washed dishes and edited the journal ‘Cheerful Images’. From 1987 he became a professional writer, primarily a poet. His work was first published in 1985. In 1990 at the ‘All-Russian Competition for Young Writers of Children’s Literature’ he won his first prize with his book of poems ‘If you throw a stone up’. He became a member of the Russian Writers’ Union in 1991.
- A.Usachev has produced over 250 works for children in Russia. Six of his books are recommended by the Russian Ministry of Education as teaching aids in schools, including ‘Safety Advice for Everyday Life’ (for 7-10 year-olds), ‘Declaration of Human Rights’, ‘My Geographical Discoveries’ and ‘Learning to Save Energy’ (for 9-10 year olds).
- Aside from his poetry and prose, Usachev has written a great deal for the stage, mainly for puppet theatre and musical productions. He has written or co-written around 15 plays. His plays have been performed in 50 theatres in Russia as well as in Ukraine and Belarus.
- At ‘The Multifilm Union’, ‘The Screen’, ‘Christmas Films’ and ‘STV’ studios Usachev has created 25 animated films based on his stories and poetry, including one full-length film.
- He has written the scripts for two children’s feature films as well as the 40 episodes of the television series ‘The Little Dragon & Co’.
- He has worked a great deal in television. Around a hundred of his children’s programmers were shown, just between 1995 and1996, as part of his ‘Cheerful Campaign’.
- Over 50 children’s songs based on his poetry and music have been performed on television and he has released 30 albums of his songs and stories.
- Over the years Usachev has worked with ‘Radio Russia’ to produce radio programmers for children including ‘The Cheerful Radio Campaign’ and ‘The Flying Sofa’.
- He was awarded the Golden Ostap prize for his children’s songs at the Festival of Satire and Humour in 2005, and he won the national ‘Book of the Year’ competition for his book ‘333 Cats’. He has subsequently won the Marshak, Chukovsky and Koval literary prizes as well as awards at the ‘Peter and the Wolf’ Festival and the ‘Musical Heart of Theatre’. He has taken part in international book fairs in Saar-Brücken, Frankfurt, Jerusalem, London and Havana.
- His books have been translated into Hebrew, Moldovan, Ukrainian, German, French, English, Chinese, Thai, Korean, Dutch and Polish.
- In 2009 he was nominated for the Astrid Lindgren International Prize. In 2012 he won the Hans Christian Andersen List of Honour.
- He plays the guitar and frequently travels the world putting on productions for children. Outside Russia he has performed in Germany, Switzerland, Israel, Great Britain and the USA on many occasions.
- A.Usachev has been married since 1983 and has two children.
Andrey Usachev’s
Contribution to Children’s Literature

- Andrey Usachev’s Contribution to Children’s Literature
- Andrei Usachev is one of Russia’s most successful authors and despite his relative youth he is already regarded as a classic in the world of children’s literature.
- In his 30 years of writing he has produced over 200 books (including reprints) in Russia. 15 of his books have been translated into 11 languages.
- Usachev writes for children in virtually every genre: poems, novels, drama, television scripts, translations and songs.
- His enormous educational contribution is unquestioned, given that six of his books are recommended by the Russian Ministry of Education as teaching aids in schools including ‘Safety Advice for Everyday Life’ (for 7-10 year olds), ‘Declaration of Human Rights for Children and Adults’, ‘My Geographical Discoveries’ and ‘Learning to Save Energy’ (for 9-10 year olds). He has also written a whole series of ‘Cheerful Textbooks in Poems’, helping young children in nurseries and primary schools to understand the Russian language, maths, astronomy, zoology and other curriculum areas.
- Usachev’s educational contribution also includes his development of linguistics and literature through works such as ‘The Cheerful ENETSyclopedia’, the first Russia-Enets language dictionary in poems (the Enets people are a tiny community of no more than 140 living in Taimyr in northern Russia), and also two Russian-Hebrew dictionaries in poems, which help children studying Hebrew (‘Ima, Aba and Others’ and ‘Living Azbuka’ (ABC).
- Andrei Usachev became editor of the first independent (non-state) children’s newspaper ‘Tram Number We’, which was launched at the beginning of the Perestroika era in 1987-1988 and he wrote Russia’s first children’s television series entitled ‘The Little Dragon & Co’ in 2001.
- He wrote musical productions such as ‘The Game of Classics’ (a combination of classical music and poetry for children) and ‘Walking around the Museums’ (a story about the pictures in the poems).
- He has been awarded numerous literary prizes. He held seminars for young children’s writers for a period of time.
- He continues to perform in Russia as well as abroad where he gives concerts for Russianspeaking children.
- In 2015 he organised ‘The Cheerful School of Children’s Writers’ which gives drama lessons to school children and pre-school children.
- He is patron of the Azbuka Foundation in London (promoting Russian-English Bilingual education) and Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Russian State Children’s Library in Moscow.
Interview with writer
Excerpts from the interview taken by Olga Haritonova

Saratov Regional Library for Children and Youth named after A.S. Pushkin made its readers a wonderful gift — Andrey Usachev, a well-known (one even might say, a famous) children’s writer gave his talks here two days in a row. He is a poet, a writer, a composer and a performer of children’s songs that he writes himself. And his “333 cats” was awarded the title of the best children’s book in 2005.

Listening to him is a real pleasure. The speaker started talking — a minute passed, and one of the kids said out loud (and rightly so) that Usachev is akin to Pushkin. His communication with the children reminded a witty blitz: we found out that Usachev started writing while still in high school — he created song lyrics for the school band he played in. His favorite animal is an elephant. His mother was a school principal. He thinks childhood is a sad period — a child has too many bosses. Usachev says that “Harry Potter” is a great book and his favorite animated films are “The Tale of Fairy Tales” and “Hedgehog in the Fog”.

— Andrey, your books are published in multiple copies, they serve as scripts for animated films, you often talk on the radio, including the “Echo of Moscow” radio channel — that is, you have a very large pool of admirers — and, all of a sudden, you come to Saratov library and talk to kids there. Why?

— Our Russian literature “suffers” from the enlightenment disease. It thinks getting mixed with the trends of social or political life is not always a good thing. But the Russian tradition — to be something more than just literature — stems from the entire Russian culture that serves people. Such meetings are important to both children and libraries — they help overcome the feeling of loneliness and human isolation from the rest of the world. Children’s literature in Russia has always been to some extent pedagogical and educational. I may have become a children’s writer because I wanted to make people see that everything isn’t so difficult as it seems. Adult literature demonstrates that the world is not so simple. Children’s literature tends to do quite the opposite — it structures the world and simplifies it, this is why humor writers often write for children — the method is the same.

— Why do children find linguistic fairy tales so interesting? What do you think?

— Kids love to play, and playing with words is yet another game. Words are unique — they are available to anyone. Painting or playing musical instruments is not something everyone can do, but words are the unique tools that everyone can enjoy since childhood. There is no complexity in this — this is no playing the harp, you know. Kids love “verbal shenanigans” because they are bored. There is a lack of miracles in our lives, and any game or any transformation of one reality into another one is a miracle! Besides, this miracle is freely available and you get it immediately.

Excerpts from the interview taken by Inna Bartosh

— How do you feel about the talks predicting the imminent ousting of books by computer and the like?

— Reading a good book requires stamina. The child discovers the world through books, while the adult is already surfeited with reading. High literature is meant for few chosen ones — there is no way escaping this. We have to feed people first — only then we can demand any moral responsibility from them. Universal literacy is a necessity, and universal love of reading is something that never happened and never will — it is a myth. One understands the laws of life via books, but there is a possibility to do this through observing nature or talking to people. There are different ways to do it. Adult books are not everything — let me, a writer, tell you this. But children’s literature is very important — everyone needs it. If someone is taught to read good books when a child, they will do it throughout their entire lives.

In modern Russia, Andrey Usachev is the number one children’s writer — his books are published in millions of copies, he is even called “the Marshak of our times”. Usachev also writes songs for children and about children. His verses are used for making animated films, he is a script writer and a radio presenter, a composer and a poet. He is just the person we need for a thorough talk about literature!

— Andrey, do you think there is no practical application for poems nowadays — except for the early childhood — because poetry has no audience? Or is there any?

— All poems have their own specific periods of existence. Children — when they are 8-10 years old — like poems. Then the interest drops. People get back to poetry when they are already 16-17 years old. Between these two age periods poetry — and books, in general — recedes into the background, because music is much more important for this age group. At least, this is what happened to me and many of my friends.

— Special thanks to you for the “Playground” music albums. How do all these tricks and shticks appear in your head? I mean the ones that serve ideas for a poem or a song.

— The approach is very simple — to come up with something that readers (or listeners) would find interesting, something neither primitive nor too difficult... In art, the ratio of new and already familiar things is very important. My shticks and tricks are, most likely, the signs of my power to invent, despite the fact that I did not become a physicist or chemist.

— What helps you to relax, get distracted, switch to other activities?

— I am lucky — I can do many things: when I get tired of poetry, I switch to prose, when prose starts driving me mad, I get down to writing a song or writing a play... I take a break by switching from one genre to another. And when I get tired of everything, I go on a fishing trip. Forest and river swipe all the cultural garbage out of my head.

Excerpts from the interview taken by Galina Kasyannikova

Andrey Usachev, the famous children’s poet and writer, the author of the famous “Sonia the Smart Dog” and “Malusya and Rogopaedist” (a speech therapy bestseller), reflects on the contemporary children’s books, specifying what children — from toddlers to teens — should read and how they should do it.

— So what exactly, in your opinion, children should choose when starting reading on their own?

— Well, any simple text. You know, children get more fun from the very fact they are actually reading something — and being good at it — than from the book contents. There are specially simplified texts, children’s fairy tales and wonderful short stories by Leo Tolstoy — “Filippok” and others.

— What other books can you recommend — out of those that we did not read in our childhood?

— We weren’t aware of two wonderful writers who are considered classics of world children’s literature: one of them is Dick King-Smith, a great writer who created wonderful fairytales. The second author, Roald Dahl, is British also (I tend to love their prose, in general). His tales are to die for — one is better than the other! We know him better than King-Smith, thanks to the “Charlie and the Chocolate Factory” movie — although I did not like Tim Burton’s version that much, this wasn’t his best work. But there was a brilliant movie “Matilda” with Danny DeVito who played a nasty dad, and the movie named “The Witches”. These films are good — and the books they were based on are great.

— Why is it that nowadays mainly translated children’s books get published?

— Those children who live in the country are more active: they look healthier, their cheeks are pink, they are not exhausted by the huge flow of information or the abundance of cultural events. They still play soccer in the backyard — and that’s wonderful. They use Internet, too, of course, but they also have nature and wildlife barely a wave away. I’ve traveled to Plesetsk recently — and children there are excellent, they are normal school kids — just like in any other town. Asking officials or parents about the situation with children’s reading habits is meaningless — one has to ask librarians. Regional libraries are often tight local communities where everyone knows each other, and librarians say that children do come, they do read — but, of course, much less than they used to. Now children can play with their friends online or find something interesting on the Internet. This is normal. The process of reading is within the framework that is usual for humans. No normal country could be literature-centric. Great Britain, for instance, is a greatest literary power, yet it isn’t literature-centric.

Ten most important works of creative writer

Andrey Usachev. Great and mighty Russian language. Winged words in verses and pictures for children of all ages. Drofa-Plus, Moscow, 2013
Well-known and widely-used turns of speech become "winged" because they quickly fly by word of mouth. The significant of such expression is not easy to discern, because it doesn’t emerge from the meanings of its constituent words.
In poetic form, Andrey Usachev gives to a child the key to the mystery of meaning "between the lines", the key to the riddles and semantic puzzles of imaginative Russian language! Cheerful and mischievous verses help the child to understand the "winged words" and use them in his speech.

Andrey Usachev. All about Dedmorozovka. Fairy tales. ROSMEN, Moscow, 2014
There is a little village Dedmorozovka in the far North, somewhere in Arkhangelsk or Vologda region of Russia, were lives Father Frost and his granddaughter Snegurochka. But also there live snowmen — the helpers of Father Frost.
This story was invented by children's author Andrei Usachev and very quickly, the inhabitants of this village have become popular among kids. About life in the Dedmorozovka village were made two animated films,

Striking satirical sketches of the famous children's book illustrator Victor Chizhikov and mocking and sad, lyrical and humorous verses of the children's writer Andrey Usachev has created a unique encyclopedic novel about the habits, characters and customs of cats! In the "cat community" of creative collaboration between the artist and the poet live cats from different backgrounds: hooligans and sluggards, athletes and really couch potatoes, musicians, artists and poets, philosophers and thinkers! Both adult and child in this "cat world" will find
Andrey Usachev. Verses. Volume 1, Moscow, EKSMO, 2013
This collection includes all the young readers’ most favorite verses of this children's writer

Andrey Usachev. ‘Clever Doggy Sonya’. Stories. Moscow, Machaon, 2014
There are fun and fascinating stories about the "king’s" mongrel Sonya. So called Sonya because her master’s name was Ivan Korolev (in Russian “korol’” — “king”). The “king’s” mongrel really wants to be smart! Refusing to be bored, she gets involved in incredible stories, and when she thinks, why is this happening, she is learning good manners and perceives the world around.

There is an unusual tree growing on a magic planet named O. It helps everyone open their hearts to dreams and fantasies. Here even restless and noisy kids dream magic dreams, and parents feel like children again. The magic tree can turn a pumpkin into a balloon — or a squash into an airship, it can give a talking pony as a present or... This is a book of short stories — happy stories!
Ten most important works of creative writer

Andrey Usachev. Full Kotoboy! 2016, Moscow, Rosman
The book is the complete collection of stories about the amazing adventures of brave cats — the residents of Kotma village: Captain Kotauskas, First Mate Afonya and the Cabin Boy — a young mouse named Shuster. The three of them will have lots of adventures! They will go to the North Pole — to get the best herring in the world; they will visit Japan in search of a goldfish, and they will even reach Egypt with the aim to send Afonya off to his incredible honeymoon.
The brave cats will have to fight not only sharks and rats, but also people... in order to defend their independence.

Andrey Usachev. ABC by Sonia the Smart Dog. 2016, Moscow, Rosman
What is human alphabet like from a dog’s point of view? Well, of course, all its letters look like something any dog would find important: S — a sausage, C — a couch, G — “grr” (growling of a dog or a car). Here’s the way Sonia comments on the significance of this alphabet: “Nowadays, being well-read is very important. There are so many interesting books in the world: “Kashtanka” by Chekhov, “The White Poodle” by Kuprin, “White Fang” by London, “Heart of a Dog” by Bulgakov and “Mumu” by Turgenev. Every person — and every intelligent dog, too — should read them. This is why I created this alphabet. I hope it will not only teach all dogs to read, but help children also.”
Sonia-the-smart-dog was created in the distant 1991. Since then the famous “royal mongrel” has remained one of the most recognizable and all-liked characters in modern children’s literature. 25 years passed, but the cute, cunning and still incredibly clever dog Sonia continues being the source of readers’ admiration.
The poet suggests the young readers take a walk along the halls of one of the best Russian art museums — the famous Tretyakov Gallery. He gladly introduces them to each painting; besides, he does not simply talk to them — he does this in verse. All these poems are truly wonderful — and different at the same time: funny and sad, humorous and serious, descriptive and metaphorical. The poems are short but extremely succinct. They give a child the first glimpse on the story behind the most famous paintings in the Russian art history. And they do it in a witty and interesting way.

REVIEWS OF THE BOOK:

Elena Chvanova
This is a great book. My kid (4 years old) looks at the photos of paintings and listens to the poems with great pleasure. I believe this is the ideal way to introduce preschoolers to the world of art.

Natalia Romina
The idea of this book is absolutely wonderful — and I applaud the author: introducing kids to the famous paintings from the Tretyakov Gallery through poetry is an incredibly creative thought. The poems that accompany the paintings are very nice.

Irina Kuzina
We liked the book! No — we liked it very, very much! All the famous paintings nicely described in verse — this is exactly what children need when they start learning about art and artists!

Elena Martynova
The book is wonderful! And a great way to introduce small children to paintings! Having read each poem, my son (5 years old) and I studied the painting in detail and discussed it. We read the entire book first — and then we went to the museum, book in hand, and looked for the paintings from it (admiring many other paintings in process). With this book, our visit to the Tretyakov Gallery turned out to be much more interesting and surely more fun! We would find a painting, immediately look it up in the book and read the poem about it one more time. We saw a mom with a girl at the museum — and the kid held the very same book, too.
Ten most important works of creative writer

Originally, the book is called "Tale without end or beginning." This story has become paradigmatic in Russia, as it is written very briefly and comprehensively. It seems to be nothing more than a paradox, overturning our view of the world. Yet, it does have a philosophical meaning too.

The Ant crawled to the beach. He watched the waves rolling onto the shore one after another, and became sad: "The Sea is so big and I so small... In my whole life, I won’t even be able to see the end of it...
So why am I living on the Earth?"
The Ant sat down under a palm tree and cried—so upset he felt. Then the Elephant came to the shore and asked:
— What are you crying, Ant?
— The end of the sea is not visible — the Ant sobbed. — You, the Elephant, are so huge...can you, probably, see it?
The Elephant concentrated: he was watching and watching— even tiptoed—but he didn’t see anything. The Elephant sat next to the Ant and started crying too.
So they cried and cried... Suddenly, the Ant suggested:
— Listen, Elephant! You go climb the palm tree, I’ll climb on you, and we’ll see!
The Ant climbed the Elephant, and the Elephant climbed the palm: they were watching and watching — and still couldn’t see anything!.. They were now sitting on the palm tree crying. Then the Tuna swam up to the shore.
"Hey,"— he shouted— you, on the shore! What’s wrong? The sea water is salty enough!
— The sea has no end in sight, ’ the Ant and the Elephant replied. — How comes? — replied the surprised Tuna.— Isn’t this the end of the sea? In my opinion, here is just the place where it ends!
— That’s true! — The Ant got happy. — Cheers, Elephant! We see the end of the sea!
— Hurray! — blew the Elephant and began to descend from the tree. But on the way he stopped stunned by a thought and asked:
— And where is its beginning then?
